Chapter 1:

Introduction To Your New Life

Synopsis

I know that if you are a smoker it may be difficult to quit. However, if you wish to stop you will. You'll get the willpower to take charge. Smoking isn't good for anybody. Second hand, smoke has proven to be worse than smoking. For those around you, once you smoke you're hurting them too. Many individuals smoke for years, which make it hard to quit. Nevertheless, you have help and hope, particularly if you wish to quit bad enough.

The Basics

Preventing unhealthy living:

Why do individuals begin smoking? A few individuals begin smoking because they think it's something cool and their friends are impressed. They believe it makes them look mature. Regrettably, many individuals begin smoking early in life. Many individuals regrettably end up with bronchitis, breathing issues, cancer, and lung disease and so on. As teenagers, we thought it was the cool thing to do, as all of our friends were doing it. We might have picked up the habit watching parents or grandparents smoke.

How smoking impacts you:

No one knows what would happen to you if you don't quit until the time comes for you to know. You may get cancer in your mouth, in your lungs, you might have a difficult time breathing, fast heartbeat, you might have problems walking across the room. Many things might happen to you if you don't quit. Ironically, however, a few individuals smoke for years and nothing happens to them. Yet, throughout the years these individuals feel sluggish, tired, and frequently get colds more often.

The advantages of stopping smoking:

Just think if you quit smoking you won't have to worry about the smell in your home, in your car or on your clothes. You won't have those nasty ash trays to empty or wash. You won't have to smell nothing but the air you breathe. If you quit now you'll begin to get back yourself. You'll be able to walk across the floor or be able to breathe without using oxygen to help you there are a lot of reasons to quit, I wish you the best.

A few of the reasons individuals don't quit smoking are because they believe they'll gain weight.

Contrary to your notions, smoking will make you gain weight as you begin to age. To improve personal life you must take measures to protect your overall health, which includes maintaining weight, quit smoking and so on. The steps you take will lead you to a healthier future and a successful conclusion.

If you're finding it hard to beat the habit, we encourage you to learn about the drugs inside cigarettes. If it isn't enough to scare you into stopping now, then consider your future, living on life-support or oxygen tanks.

Chapter 2:

Basics To Breaking Old Habits

Synopsis

Change is all about results. If you remain off cigarettes and you're living a satisfying life then that's good. You've exposed your calling and whatever plan (or lack thereof) that you're working appears to be the right fit for you.

In other words, if you're attempting to recover from an addiction, the best thing to do is to do what figures out for you. Instead of taking a hard-line on precisely what needs to be achieved in order to recover, traditional wisdom states you should explore and find what works best.

Where To Start

If someone acquaints you with a program--any plan at all--you must be realistic about it. Recognize that any plan for change is truly just a collection of suggestions. If a change plan is going to work for you, do you think it's the actual suggestions of the program that bring about the results, or do you think that the results bank more heavily on your personal actions? Just how complicated is a plan of change, truly? It's not what you do; it's how you achieve it. Consider what a great change plan truly consists of. We might break it down like this:

- 1) Abstinence
- 2) A blueprint for living
- 3) Support and networking (assisting others)
- 4) Personal maturation

Really, where is the mystery in this? Certainly, it's a lot of stuff. And no, it's not unavoidably simple to achieve. Individuals fail at change again and again. But my point is that there's no grand mystery in the plan itself. The answers are in the action.

There's a shift that occurs once the struggling addict in early on change is no more battling to remain free of nicotine; they discover a particular peace about themselves and things start clicking for them. Either that or they relapse. However the idea of transition is real.

Change is split into short-term and long-run change. We do particular things to begin with to remain clean. If we don't alter our strategy eventually and make the transition to long-run change, we relapse. We must change in order to make it over the long run.

We must achieve particular things in early on change to remain clean. These are different things for everyone, but the precepts are the same: we require a strong support system, much structure; some require protection from the outside world (like a treatment center). Still these things won't keep you clean 5 years down the road or even one year out. Those who don't changeover to long-run, holistic living will inevitably slide back into their old behaviors.

No one consciously knows once they're making this jump from short-term to long-run change. It simply occurs. You're able to retrospect, naturally, and discover how you grew through the stage.

So how may we know what to do? How may we help the changeover? The answer to this is what the originative theory is all about. The answer lies in the 3 primary techniques:

- 1) Treasuring self

- 2) Networking with others

3) Push for holistic maturation

Particularly, the push for holistic maturation is a critical component of the transition. I'm not so certain that you're able to plan this sort of growth out specifically, however. What's crucial is to get past the mentality of "I'm just going to focus on my plan and not get distracted with schooling or career or additional things right now." Many traditional plans don't encourage holistic maturation so if you focus on them then you're going to be doing so at the exclusion of additional growth opportunities.

All the same maturation involves change. We either move onward in change or we slide back.

So my proposal is to seek holistic growth opportunities right from the beginning. Find ways to diversify and grow or learn outside of the limits of "traditional change." This may include things like physical fitness, nutrition, meditation, training, the arts, learning new skills, building new relationships, etcetera.

The transition occurs once you grow beyond the minute focus of your early change efforts. Once we're working a traditional plan of change, we tend to have a restricted view in that we perceive all potential growth as being one-dimensional. Maybe the twelve step model has facilitated this idea as the twelve steps are plainly ordered and are in sequence.

Still in holistic living, maturation may be expansive and non-linear. Regardless what program you're working, most individuals don't grow at a regular pace in change. Many of us careen around for a while to begin with, trying to find our footing and merely get through the cravings and urges of every day. Later on, once we have been making holistic growth attempts, our maturation in change may be explosive.

In other words, at times we have to slog through a tough time in change once we see little results from our attempts. The payoff comes eventually once all of our holistic maturation attempts begin paying off down the road at some point.

The only real enemy in long-run change is complacency. After living nicotine free, we no longer battle with daily urges or even with more elusive threats to change like resentments or self-pity. Rather, the true challenge in long-term change is to continue challenging ourselves to mature.

Center on the 3 primary techniques and continue pushing yourself to grow, and complacency will take care of itself. Once we're first beginning in change, there are a few high impact matters that we may do in order to get going on the right foot. These are action oriented matters we may do, like:

- 1) Attend treatment

- 2) Attend meetings
- 3) Call our sponsor or additional recovering addicts
- 4) Examine change literature or write up step work

And so forth. These are the sorts of things that are normally suggested to newbies in change. Why? Because they work. They help.

Best is to challenge yourself to mature in your change and develop as a spiritual being. What does this entail? It means that instead of ditching your issues and sniveling in a meeting daily, you ought to be spending your energy in richer ways as you advance in change. One way to achieve this would be to provide addiction help to others.

You may likewise seek to discover new ways to grow outside of the limits of traditional change. For example, the twelve step plan typically centers on spiritual growth solely. This is a shortsighted viewpoint and to really recover you have to heal your life in additional ways too, including physically, emotionally, socially, etc. In order to recover, you have to live this way.

Chapter 3:

Nutritional Tips For Conquering Ciggy Cravings

Synopsis

Blood sugar plummets in a lot of People when first quitting. The commonest side effects experienced during the first days might frequently be traced back to blood sugar issues. Symptoms like headache, inability to focus, vertigo, time sensing distortions, and the ubiquitous sweet tooth found by many, are frequently affiliated with this blood sugar drop.

Think About The Food

The symptoms of low blood sugar are essentially the same symptoms as not getting enough oxygen, similar to reactions experienced at high altitudes. The reason being the poor supply of sugar and/or oxygen means the brain is getting an incomplete fuel. If you've plenty of one and not plenty of the other, your brain can't operate at any sort of optimal level. Once you quit smoking, oxygen levels are frequently better than they've been in a while, however with a modified supply of sugar it can't properly fuel your brain.

If you use food to raise blood sugar levels, it literally takes up to 20 minutes from the time you chew and swallow the food before it's discharged to the blood, and thus the brain, for its desired effect of fueling your brain. Cigarettes, by carrying out a drug interaction get the body to give up its own stores of sugar, however not in twenty minutes however commonly in a matter of minutes. In a way, your body hasn't had to give up sugar from food in years; you've done it by utilizing nicotine's drug effect!

This is why many People truly gorge themselves on food upon quitting. They start to go through a drop in blood sugar and instinctively get hold of something sweet. Upon finishing the food, they still feel symptoms. Naturally they do, it takes them a moment or two to eat, however the blood sugar isn't hiked up for another 18 minutes. As they're not feeling instantly better, they devour a bit more. They carry on eating increasingly more food, moment after moment till they at last start to feel better.

Again if they're waiting for the blood glucose to go up we're talking of 20 minutes after the 1st swallow. People may eat a lot of food in 20 minutes. However they start to trust that this was the amount required before feeling better. This may be replicated many times throughout the day therefore causing many calories being ingested and inducing weight gain to become a real risk.

Once you abruptly quit smoking, the body is in sort of a state of loss, not willful how to work normally as it hasn't worked normally in such a while. Generally by the 3rd day, however, your body will readjust and relinquish sugar as it's required. Without consuming any more your body will simply work out how to govern blood sugar more efficiently.

You may find however that you do have to change dietary patterns to one that's more regular for you. Regular isn't what it was as a smoker, however more what it was before you took up smoking . A few People go till evening without eating while they're smokers. If they attempt the same process as ex-smokers they'll have side effects of low blood sugar.

It isn't that there's something wrong with them now; they were abnormal previously for all pragmatic purposes. This doesn't mean they should consume more food, however it may mean they have to redistribute the food consumed to a more scattered pattern so they're getting blood sugar doses throughout the day as nature truly had always intended.

To downplay a few of the true low blood sugar effects of the first few days it truly might help to drink juice throughout the day. After the 4th day however, this should no longer be essential as your body should be able to give up sugar stores if your diet is normalized.

If you're having problems that are indicative of blood sugar issues beyond day 3, it wouldn't hurt speaking to your doctor and per chance acquiring some nutritionary counseling.
